Our friend Denniston has recently been making some attractive additions to his stock of fancy groceries and fruits, in the line of California dried fruits, which are very much superior to anything ever before seen in this city. In fact there is nothing in the way of choice can goods, dried fruits, and so on, that Mr. Denniston doesn't keep, and he always has the best. Read his advertisement, but go and see his stock and there you will find just what you want.

Mrs. H. A. Patterson entertained a few of her lady friends yesterday afternoon, and among those present were Mrs. Will King and son; Mrs. Levi Bliss and son; Mrs. Cole McLain and son; Mrs. Ed Smith and son; and Mrs. George Scar cliff and son. We know that the ladies spent a pleasant afternoon, but there must have been a war among the babies, as it seldom occurs that so many little warriors are congregated unless there is a "skirmish" of some kind.

Mrs. Frank Gore, of Milwaukee, is in the city, the guest of Mrs. Ed. Davies.

Miss Ella Cassaday, daughter of Judge J. B. Cassaday, has returned from a visit to her sister, Mrs. George Wheelock, at South Bend, Indiana.

FIFTY YEARS.

A Surprise and a Celebration—How the Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Dickson was Remembered Last Night.

The Presence and the Speeches—Incidents of the Happy Occasion.

Last evening a genuine surprise and an interesting celebration took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Dickson, on South Main street, in the third ward. The surprise was well planned and admirably carried out. Fifty years ago yesterday, Mr. and Mrs. Dickson were married at Danville, Vermont, and a few of the intimate friends of the aged couple concluded to celebrate the event in a manner befitting a golden wedding anniversary. Miss Mary Stevens, who has been a member of the Dickson household for more than ten years, and her brother, Major P. J. Stevens and his wife, were the chief movers in the happy surprise and the interesting celebration. The friends and neighbors were made acquainted with the programme, and between seven and eight o'clock the invited guests met at the homes of Mr. W. H. Leonard and Alderman D. E. Fifield, and thence marched in a body to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dickson. The surprise was complete as the venerable couple did not in the least suspect that the day would close so happily.

When the guests, nearly one hundred in number, had fairly taken possession of the house, and Mr. and Mrs. Dickson had sufficiently recovered from the effects of the surprise, two easy chairs were presented to them by the Hon. Charles G. Williams, when he delivered the following timely and interesting address:

MR. WILLIAMS' REMARKS.

MR. AND MRS. DICKSON.—Through your neighbors and friends, Janesville witnesses one of the happiest events to-night. She sees two young lives blended, commencing the race with her; growing with her growth, and strengthening with her strength, until they stand here before us filled with usefulness and ripe with honor.

"This is your golden wedding day. These friends here come to bid you, but bidden by that better impulse of duty, which, while you are sorrow with those who grieve, is gladdest with those who are glad. Fifty years ago to-day in the old family mansion, at Danville, Vermont, John P. Dickson and Lorrinda Stevens, plighted their troth in the sacredness of mutual love. How faithfully they have kept the vow, and how well they have trodden the path of duty, and how pure the life, and how bright the future, attest to all eyes and hearts here to-night. To dwell upon sad or sentimental memories, would be strangely out of place, with spirits as buoyant as yours, I fancy, that all along life's highway your eyes have not rested so much upon its bogs and shadows as upon its happy hills and shining fields. Bowed and that he lives longest and best who has the young for his constant companions, as we know, the few years of age do not necessarily cover a bowed or broken spirit. Some at thirty are more broken and chilled than others at three score and ten. No bird of ill omen, I think, will chatter in the chimney house of your old age, but those of brighter plumage will bring here with their sweet songs the old time welcome, warmth and cheer."

You sit, in your western home, at the foundation of a state. You occupied the magistracy's chair and administered justice with becoming dignity and great good sense; you sat in the legislature wielding a political influence and gaining great honor; you surrounded yourself with all the comforts and even the luxuries of home and fortune; you have been identified from the first with the business enterprises and growth of this fair and thrifty city. Through it all, the who stands by your side to-night, has been your worthy helpmeet and friend; and now comes your neighbors to crown you both with the laurel wreath of their respect and love. A golden wedding is apt to suggest a gold-banded couple, but with spirits as bright as yours, we will waive for the present the idea of which suggests hobbling on canes or crutches, but look out for part second. We bring here and present you with these chairs. They are chairs of ease, chairs of comfort, chairs of honor. We bid you sit in them for many, many happy days; and as you repose here in your green old age, Janesville's children will come hereafter as heretofore to fill your hearts with joy and bring you childhood's unalloyed and fragrant love. The scene we bespeak for you, has never been but once described by mortal tongue. At this moment of its highest exultation that said:

Strike with hand of fire, Oh, woe! musician, thy harp, Bring with Apollo's golden hair, Fill our vast temple with sweet tones, With symphonies sweet and dim, Deft touches of the organ keys; For the love that presides here, Until the silver notes do touch the sky, With moonlit waves, and charm the lovers' hearts, fill the eyes with light and every heart with joy. Oh, rippling river of life, Oh, fountain of blessing, bid the line Between the beasts and man, And every wayward way of time, Both down and up, be done away, Oh, laughter, divine daughter of joy, Make dimples, plump in the cheeks of the young, To catch and hold and glorify all the tears of grief."

Let this house be dimpled to-night and let its every nook ring with joy!

Judge John R. Bennett, in behalf of the recipients, made a very fitting response in the following tender language:

JUDGE BENNETT'S RESPONSE.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I am happy, and consider it a distinguished honor, in being deputed on this auspicious occasion, by the gentleman before whom I tried my first case in Wisconsin, to respond to the appropriate and graceful address to which you have just listened.

You are all aware that Juno was the goddess of wedlock, and that anciently, at the nuptial sacrifices, the gall was taken away from the birds offered upon the marriage altar, to signify that betwixt the couple there united, there should be nothing of bitterness and discontent, but that instead, sweetness and love should fill up the whole space of their lives.

We know not what birds were offered on the marriage altar a half century ago, when the hearts of our friends were made one; but if we may judge of the auguries, from subsequent events, we can rest in the assurance that the galls were all removed and cast behind the altar, and that the fragrance which then arose from the smacking sacrifices, has sweetened and made happy the two lives then made one, during their entire pilgrimage.

In wedlock to love is a greater blessing than to be loved; and in marriage, that one is most happy whose affection is deepest and most enduring, because it preserves and keeps those who have it from falling into many errors, which corrupt and mar the matrimony. We shall not attempt to say in what this silver cord of affection was strongest, that has ever bound these hearts in the closest and tenderest friendship, whose golden wedding we are assembled to commemorate. And we can all say to-night, with the poet Cotton:

"Though fools spurn Hymen's gentle powers, We improve his gifts to our own hours, By sweet experience known, True marriage rightly understood, Gives to the heart and the good, A paradise below."

In behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Dickson, I gratefully accept these elegant easy chairs kindly and generously given by you, and in the hope that they will bring that rest to their aged bodies, which shall correspond to that calm and sweet repose of mind and heart, which comes from true peace, useful and noble lives harmoniously blended in one.

But the chairs were not all. The friends had purchased a gold-headed cane for Mr. Dickson, the head being properly inscribed, and this was presented by Dr. J. B. Whiting, as follows:

DR. WHITING'S REMARKS.

VENERABLE AND HONORED FRIENDS:—Venerable, because the accumulated years of useful citizenship justly entitle you to veneration; and honored, greatly, in the fact that the citizens of Janesville with whom you have lived for half a century, are here to testify their appreciation of the value of your citizenship.

The chair is emblematic of evening; and your friends have presented these chairs as a token that they hope your evenings may be restful. Other friends bring a staff for you. The staff, too, is an emblem;—one that characterizes various stages of one's life. In youth we call it a cane. Its chief significance, at this time, is that it foretells the coming man. To come with the soft down on the upper lip, or immediately follows it. The man of middle life carries the cane, perhaps, to give ornamentation and dignity to his bearing, while the old man may need the staff. It is a notable fact that the boy carries a cane to show that he is a man. The man, that has passed the meridian refrains from carrying one lest others should think he is growing old. To you, who are celebrating your golden anniversary, the staff will come with deeper significance. Take it as a token that its donors desire to make your journey safe and easy. My dear Madam: the staff is presented to your venerable husband upon whose arm you have leaned for an eventful half century. It shall enable him to walk with steady feet, and will bring just as lovingly and securely to his arm, and so the staff is yours also. May you move on cheerfully till you enter the golden gate.

There were other presents coming from Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Thomson, of Chicago, who were among the guests, from Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Clawson, of Monroe, and some from other friends. The celebration closed with a bounteous supper.

In speaking of this interesting celebration it is but an act of simple justice to pay a tribute to Miss Mary Stevens, who, as we have already said, has been a member of Mr. Dickson's family for more than ten years. Her devotion to Mr. and Mrs. Dickson has been remarkable. She has given up her whole life to that venerable couple, omitting to do nothing within her power that would tend to promote their personal comfort.

Mr. Dickson came to Janesville in 1833. He has filled several offices, and in 1860 and 1861 was a member of the legislature. He is 76 years old, enjoys a fair degree of bodily health, and the wish of his friends and neighbors is, that he and his estimable wife may yet enjoy many more years of health and happiness.

The Milton Robbery.

We have received the following additional particulars of the robbery at Milton on Monday night, from our correspondent in that village:

The postoffice was burglarized Monday night. The job was done by professional men, the postmaster Clarke's loss amounts to about $500. W. W. Clarke is out about $200 in money, and watches and chains to the amount of $100 more. J. B. Anderson had $300 in the safe which was taken, and other parties lost small amounts. The cracksmen left their tools behind them. No clue has been found of them. They used a jimmy and entered through a window.

A Model Restaurant.

Mr. George A. Shurtleff has opened a restaurant in the Wilmington block, on West Milwaukee street, opposite Denniston's store. This building has been put in repair especially for Mr. Shurtleff's use, and taking all in all it is the handsomest restaurant ever established in this city. Attractive gilt paper decorates the walls, handsome Brussels carpets cover the floor, the furniture is neat and homelike, and new beautiful ware is found upon the tables. When it comes to the substantial—the meals—there are no persons in the city better qualified to cater to the public appetite than Mr. Shurtleff and his wife. They know how to do it and never fail to do it well. They have gained an excellent reputation by providing for private parties, and they will add to their laurels in their new place of business. They are worthy of success, and will win it.
